

Figure 2-1. Simplified memory diagrams for a tuple and an array, each with three items. Gray cells represent the in-memory header of each Python object—not drawn to proportion. The tuple has an array of references to its items. Each item is a separate Python object, possibly holding references to other Python objects, like that two-item list. In contrast, the Python array is a single object, holding a C language array of three doubles.